

Commissioner Rob Barrett Announces His Retirement

The Commissioner of the Missouri Division of Finance, Rob Barrett, has announced his plan to retire at the end of this year. "It has been my honor and pleasure to serve as Commissioner of Finance and I am grateful for the opportunity Governor Parson gave me in November 2019 to lead this agency," Commissioner Barrett said. "I have absolute faith in the staff at the Division to maintain the progress we have accomplished over the last two years and continue to serve the citizens and banks of this state in an extraordinary manner".

Prior to his appointment as Commissioner of Finance, Mr. Barrett had a successful career in banking that began in the early 1980's and concluded in serving as the longtime President and CEO of Heritage State Bank in Nevada. "As a banker I always respected the necessary role of practical regulation of the banking industry. It was enriching to work every day with such knowledgeable, reasonable, and dedicated Division staff. I also believe it was beneficial for the Division to be afforded my perspective that will further enhance their ability to protect depositors and ensure a fair marketplace for industry," Commissioner Barrett added.

Commissioner Barrett is looking forward to spending more time back at home in Vernon County and being closer to his family.
